THEY SPOILED THE CIRCUS. A circus arrived at New Brunswick, N. J., Wednesday morning. It had stopped at Princeton the day before, and several students had been buncoed by followers of the show. Four students from Princeton vesterday morning informed County Detective Oliver that one of the janitors at the college had been buncoed the night be fore out of $50 by some one following the show. The impression was given that "janitor" should be interpreted to read "we." The students thought they could identify the man who buncord the janitor." The students could not find their men. Detective Rice said that about the time his chief arrived on the ground a party of sharpers whom he was shadowing had packed up their outfits and hurried to New Brunswick. The students from Princeton sum-moned help from that college, and an afternoon train brought a body of young men to town. Though they were quiet and reserved, it was more than plain they were bent on mischief. Rutgers College boys joined them, and were told of the happenings of the night before. When the hour for the evening performance arrived, the students were on hand. The gamblers were not, for those who had failed to flee when they found the detectives around took warn ing when the students arrived. There were very few bunco games that night

Disappointed in not being able to get even with the gamblers, the students from Princeton, supported by the Rutgers boys, took a section of the seats in the tent, and from the time the per-formance began, there was pandemo-nium. When the ring master first ap peared to make his announcements, he was allowed to proceed until he made an assertion, then from fifty voices in chorus came the words: "You're a liar!"

Every performer was unmercifully guyed, and at no time was it possible to hear the performers, so loud were class cries, catcalls, and the noise from mechanical devices. The animais shown were made almost frantic by the noise. A buffalo, at one point, ran toward the seats, but was captured before he did any damage. When the trick mule was brought on, one of the students hurled a giant torpedo under him, and the mule dashed from the tent. Firecrackers were used with effect when porses or elephants were brought in. Finally a "cowboy" became angry and threatened to lasso the leader of the students. The leader stood up and dared the cowboy to do so. The students shed their coats, and the cowboy

The concert after the performance was to cost extra money, but it did not, for the students stayed, and refused to pay or let any one else pay. The students then left. While the concert was in progress, some of the seats gave way, and several persons were thrown to the ground, but no one was seriously injured. The night before a similar accident occurred, and Eugene Gray, a

Princeton student, was injured.

After the show, while the circus was being loaded onto the cars, the buffale, which had not recovered from its terror, broke loose and raced down George street. Two cowboys, mounted, caught him near the Palmer House and led him back.

Agreeable Surprise.

"I had a severe cold on my lungs that caused much soreness and gave me considerable uneasiness in regard to the result," says Mr. T. E. Smith, of Billeric, Mass. "A local druggist called my attention to Chamberlain's Cough R medy, and on his recommendation I gave the remedy a careful trial. The Monday, March 18th.
